

Section IV: Resources

Newfoundland and Labrador History envisages a network of material and human resources extending throughout the school, into the community and to provincial, national and global resources accessible through various information and communication technologies - classrooms, school libraries, public libraries, the Internet, and resource people. No single resource can provide sufficient material to nurture the development of any learner or group for any extended period of time. The range of resources must

- reflect the diversity of the learner's interests, needs, abilities, and experiences
- support the achievement of the curriculum outcomes
- be available to learners

This curriculum guide emphasizes the diversity of resources which can support and enhance the learning environment in the history classroom. In addition to the authorized resources, a comprehensive list of additional resources is provided. This list is not all inclusive and teachers and students will find that they may have access to many other pertinent resources in their local area. While it is not expected that all teachers and students will have access to all the resources listed, they should have access to enough to provide the kinds of resource-based activities which will help them accomplish the learning outcomes of the program.
